"Leading Purchasing Transformation" an EIPM Certification for Purchasing Managers

Participants within this programme focus on improving and transforming their purchasing organisation. The programme brings together participants who share a vision where buyers continuously deliver value and contribute to solving the strategic problems of the business.

To achieve this, participants embark on a learning journey where they discover and reflect on leading-edge practices and explore a diversity of questions such as:

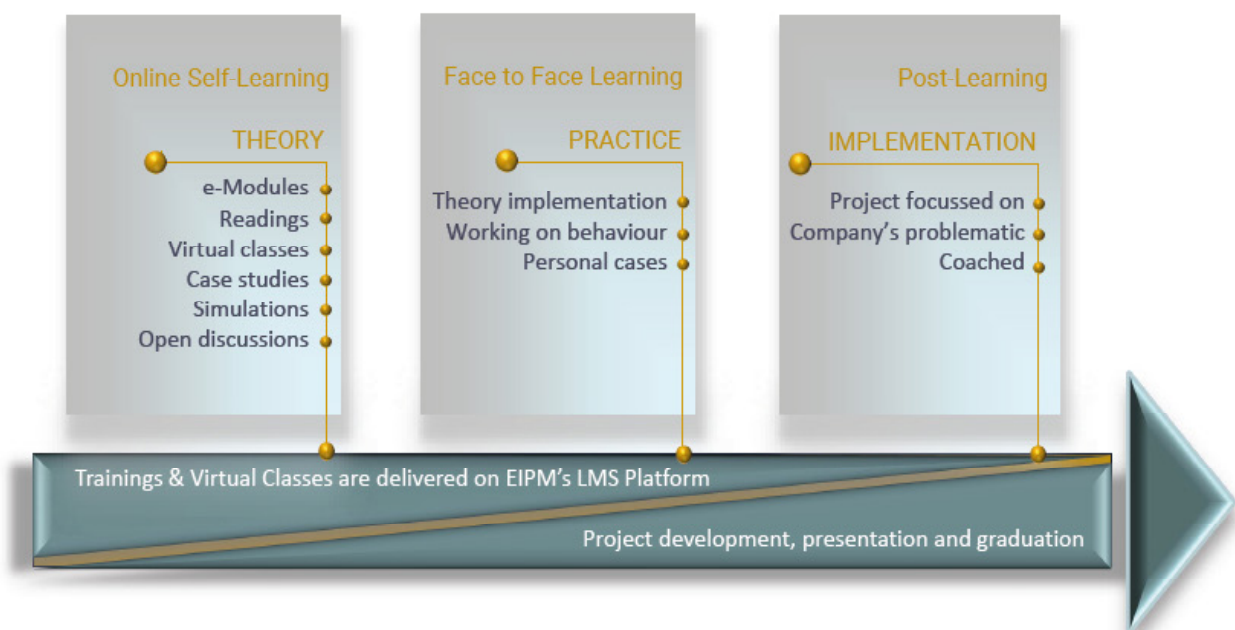

- How can we jointly explore new opportunities while delivering immediate value?
- How can we simultaneously accelerate and anticipate to progress at the right pace?
- How do we measure our performance and communicate effectively about it?
- How do we engage and motivate people while creating a team spirit to succeed together?
- How do we lead people and stakeholders through challenges?
- How to communicate and manage change effectively?

Our Leading Purchasing Transformation programme accompanies participants as they reflect on their role and bring concrete change as they progress.

Which learning mode?

FL@X!

Five years ago we foresaw a certain evolution in the demand for training. In 2019, we launched the FL@X pedagogy, a smart combination of on-site and online training in the same cursus. The stated aim was to provide a certain comfort for learners who were no longer obliged to systematically make time-consuming and costly trips. Today and more than ever, the FL@X learning format is adapted to the multiple constraints linked to the pandemic crisis and related restrictions.

Our Five commitments:

We help senior participants who join our programme to:

1. Lead change and learning activities with their teams.
2. Challenge their assumptions and see the world from different eyes.
3. Develop their curiosity by exposing them to different people and ideas.
4. Connect with and learn from others who can be source of ideas and valuable advice.
5. Challenge their limits while developing their confidence.

"Learning never exhausts the mind."

Fifth Generation Purchasing

Why Purchasing managers need to reflect on their role?

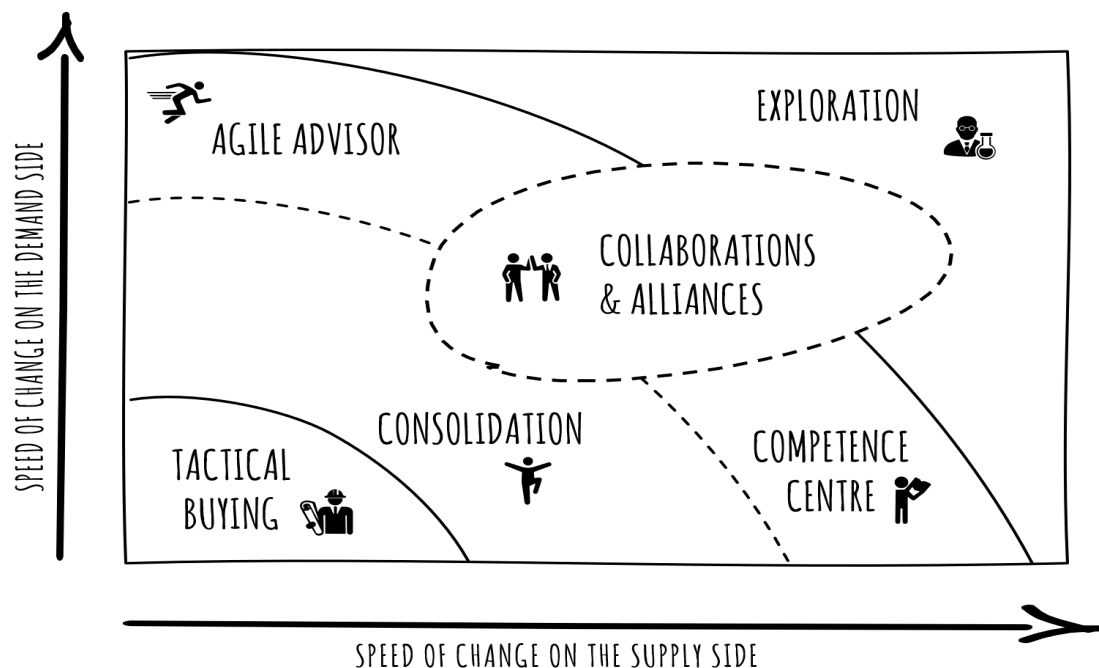

Economic activities keep moving from one location to another around the globe. While emerging countries offer cost-effective solutions, risk and sustainability concerns have encouraged some companies to create a more local supply base. Over the years, supply chains have been sliced and diced. They have at once grown in complexity and become fragmented. Value chains are transforming into dynamic ecosystems of organisations that simultaneously collaborate and compete. It is no longer uncommon for a company's suppliers to be competitors or clients.

At the same time, new technologies have created opportunities to innovate, giving rise to new business models. Sensors and software have changed the foundations of industries, often requiring collaboration with partners from diverse industries. Start-ups often spot opportunities and build differentiating capabilities faster than incumbent companies. Even though one day start-ups might compete with the incumbents, the next day they might seek collaboration, as it is difficult to scale up activities. This dynamic offers exciting challenges and strategic tensions for purchasing teams.

In this context, purchasing must become an ambidextrous, dynamic function. On an ongoing basis, purchasing teams need to contribute to efficiency gains by optimising the ways of working with existing supply networks AND participate in the exploration of emerging opportunities that bring with them value and risk.

PACE
AND POWER?

Fifth Generation Purchasing: EIPM vision for leaders

Discover in one page how EIPM sees the future of Purchasing

In the current turbulent world, we need to be able to manage some contradictory challenges such as:

To address this, purchasing teams need to work in sync with both the business and the supplier. They need to harness pace and speed to obtain an advantage for the business and capture opportunities in the market at the right time. This has led us to create the fifth generation purchasing framework. Within this framework purchasing organisations operate along two dimensions: the speed of change on the demand side and the speed of change on the supply side. For a given category or project, buyers will most certainly need to adopt a few of these work modes to be successful.

Our description of these work modes is the result of five years of extensive research. They combine outstanding practices from the winners of the EIPM-Peter Kraljic award with lessons from projects undertaken by professionals from all over the world who have participated in our education programmes. It builds on more than 100 interviews with purchasing leaders and 15 workshops and roundtables in which leading practices were presented and discussed.

HOW DO WE
SIMULTANEOUSLY
ACCELERATE
AND ANTICIPATE?

HOW DO WE BOTH
EXPLORE AND EXPLOITE
OPPORTUNITIES?

Participants in our Leading Purchasing Transformation programme will receive a copy of the Book "Fifth Generation Purchasing and some of the sessions will go through some of this working mode.

Leading Purchasing Transformation:

Who should join the programme?

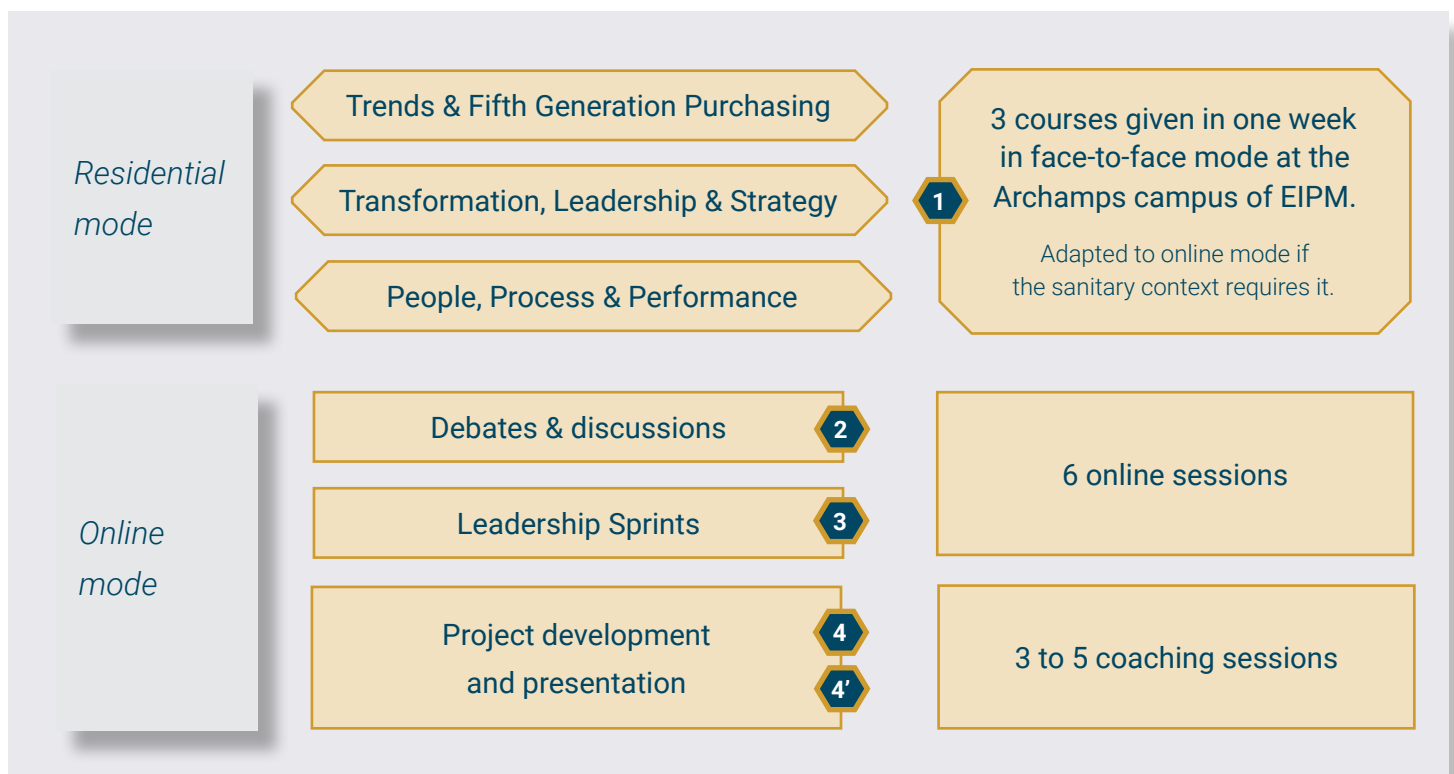

This programme was conceived for Purchasing Managers and Purchasing Directors. However, the pioneering and leadership spirit of the programme has attracted a variety of participants.

Purchasing Managers who have the support of their organisation and who have the ambition to lead development in the purchasing field.

Purchasing Managers and Directors who want to reflect on their experience and accelerate the development of their teams.

Executives and CPOs who want to infuse a new dynamic within their organisation. They take advantage of the programme to set a new agenda and progress.

Leading Purchasing Transformation:

Step 2 : Discussions

Three discussions and exchanges will be organised, participants will be provided with an article on a general management topic. The articles are carefully selected to reflect current managerial challenges experienced in purchasing. Participants will reflect on the article prior to the session through a series of questions. During the online sessions discussions amongst them will be facilitated to broaden the perspectives.

Some examples of discussion themes:

- Managing conflicting demands
- Using metaphors to guide other.
- Providing effective feedback

These discussions are planned in alternation with three Leadership sprints described here after.

Step 3 : Leadership sprints

A Leadership sprint is a four-stage process aimed at learning from others and from your own actions in a short time frame. Participants have to complete three sprints over 18 weeks.

These are small projects with a clear goal that can be achieved in 6 weeks. They aim at improving participants personal capabilities & their team capabilities. It engages others to think and act differently.

Examples of Leadership Sprint topics to be addressed within a week

- I want to act as role model for a company value
- I want to better communicate the value we deliver
- I want to create a process to systematically coach buyers on projects
- I want to solve a people or team issue
- I want to strengthen our ability to manage supply risks
- I want to solve a team issue

Four stages in a Leadership Sprint include:

Stage 1: Clarify the problem

Why is this problem worth Solving?

Stage 2: Gather suggestions and feedback from others (peers, stakeholders, teams)

What should I / We:

- Keep doing?
- Improve?
- Stop doing
- Start doing?

Stage 3: Design and test the solution

Clarify what you have learned from the test and finalise your solution

Stage 4: Sustain and Share

Share your learnings with your team and with other participants in the programme

Moving to action!

Step 4 : The project

The last step of the programme consists of a Project which participants develop over three to six months. This needs to be in line with the programme's ambitions and to deliver significant benefits for the business.

The project is selected by the participant. However it needs to be approved by their management and by EIPM.

After acceptance, participants will be coached via online one-to-one sessions by EIPM Professors. Projects are presented to a jury for validation to obtain the Certification diploma.

A formal Graduation with the complete cohort and professors allows all participants to join again on campus. It is the opportunity for participants to come with their managers and families and celebrate the graduation together.

Here are some examples of projects that have been supported by our students in a recent past.
